BREAKS DOWN TODAY

Woman Breaks Down After More Than 6 Hours Questioning

DENVER, Colo., Oct. 23.—(AP)—Mrs. Pearl O'Loughlin admitted today that she alone was to blame for the slaying of her 10-year-old step-daughter, Leonie, whose mutilated body was found in Burkerly Park lake, a week ago Tuesday night.

Captain of detectives Bert Clark, obtained an admission from Mrs. O'Loughlin after six and a half hours of questioning. After admitting this much, the woman's nerve broke and she was carried to her cell in the matrons quarters of the city jail, on the verge of a physical breakdown.

Beyond the announcement that Mrs. O'Loughlin had "talked," officer Clark said nothing, except that "I expect to get a more detailed statement later."

Clark went to his home to get a much needed rest as this case had been up day and night for some time.

Frank O'Loughlin, brother of detective O'Loughlin, was taken into custody today for questioning. Police officer Ray Humphrey, in charge of the investigation said that O'Loughlin had been shadowed for four days.

Failing to win the party endorsement, Mr. McConnell indicated at that time that he would seek the Republican nomination for governor this year, but so far as was known generally, made no effort to obtain the nomination at the 1930 convention.

Three Escape From Louisiana Prison

Long Termers Make Safe Escape From Cells in Hospital

BATON ROUGE, La., Oct. 23.—(AP)—Three New Orleans convicted holdup men serving long terms at the Angola state penal farm, near here, Tuesday night escaped from their cells in a hospital and a patient in the prison hospital and escaped, authorities let it be known Wednesday.

General Manager Clay J. Dugas of the penitentiary said that more than 100 guards had been thrown about the wide acres of the prison farm in an attempt to prevent the men from leaving the precincts of the prison plantation in the event they had not already done so. Bloodhounds, he said, were unable to pick up the trail, since the escaping prisoners took the precaution of rubbing mustard oil on their shoes.

The escaping convicts are William Woolforth and William Dupont, who were received at the penal farm in March this year on convictions for assault and robbery in connection with the Hibernia Bank branch holdup, of July, 1929, and Andrew Sanchez, also of Orleans parish, who had served more than a year on a 20 to 34 year term for assault and robbery in connection with a filling station holdup.

Salesman Held as Heiress' Kidnap

Woman Is Also Held as Suspect By Police at Carthage, Mo.

CARTHAGE, Mo., Oct. 23.—(AP)—Bill Prater, 40, an automobile salesman of Greenfield, Mo., was in custody tonight as a suspect in the unsuccessful kidnapping for ransom 10 days ago of Mrs. Alma Wilson McKinley, Greenfield heiress.

Although admitting he had sought Prater for several days, Sheriff O. E. Killingsworth refused to make public evidence which resulted in the arrest today. Mrs. Emory Hill of Carthage, recently divorced from a Scotts City (Mo.) banker was arrested with Prater and detained for questioning.

Sheriff Killingsworth said he held warrants for both Prater and Mrs. Hill, issued Monday by Justice Hobbs at Greenfield charging them with kidnapping.

The announcement was made after the sheriff conferred here with Ben M. Neale of Springfield, Mo., lawyer for Benton Wilson, Mrs. McKinley's millionaire father.

Wilson said it had not been decided whether his daughter would come here to view Mrs. Hill and Prater.

Prater denied participation in abduction of the 24-year-old woman, an expectant mother. Mrs. McKinley was released 24 hours after being forced to drive away from her home in her own automobile, with a single male kidnaper as a passenger.

After the automobile became mired in a muddy road, the kidnaper forced the woman to remain with him in the woods and later released her after she promised to pay part of the $60,000 he first demanded for her freedom.

High School Boys Found Beaten and Burning in Woods

Mystery Surrounds Finding of Youths Burning on Brush Pile

DETECTIVE WORKING

Boys Left Home About a Week Ago For Visit With Relatives

MEMPHIS, Oct. 23.—(AP)—The theory that the two North Carolina High School boys, found yesterday in the Arkansas swamps, had been attacked elsewhere and "taken to 'hobo jungle' where they were found, was advanced today by L. Nailey, officer of Crittenden county, Arkansas.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 23.—(AP)—The Mississippi River swamps held their secrets well today, in efforts of investigators to find any clue to clear up the mystery surrounding the death of two 17-year-old youths, who were found unconscious and burning on a fire Wednesday.

Incoherent mumblings at the hospital where the two were taken as soon as discovered, told nothing that would lead to what they had been through before they were placed on a brush fire about a mile south of the Harahan bridge, at a spot frequented by hobos and tramps and known to them as "the jungle."

Letters and a diary in the pockets told that the youths were Burton Hensley and Woodrow S. Wilson, both of Bald Creek, North Carolina.

Two woodchoppers found them and removed them from the flames. The heads of both were clothed with blood and one of them had a broken skull. It all seemed to have been a terrible tragedy.

A salt shaker, flecked with stains, was found near the fire. Nothing else was found to indicate whether they had been camping there.

The diary contained entries tracing an automobile journey. It indicated the youths left Sheffield, Ala., last Monday. The last entry showed the purchase of gasoline and oil at Stevenson, Ala.

Mention of the gasoline and oil and the discovery that one of the youths possessed automobile keys and a ring with the sales tag of a Winston Salem, N. C. automobile, firm, led to a search for their automobile. It was not near the spot where the bodies were discovered.

The bodies were found about a mile from the Arkansas approach to the Harahan bridge, which spans the Mississippi here. The dead man's body lay with one side in the fire, deeply burned. The other lay across a log, with his feet burning.

The woodchoppers summoned W. P. Smith, railway special officer, who said he could find nothing to tell how they got into the fire. Ambulance attendants who brought them here found only the letters and the diary.

Both letters were signed "Irene," and were dated at Daybook, N. C., one was written October 16, the other October 13.

"I miss you so. I sure wish I could be with you," it said.

A scrap of poetry, apparently written by the owner, was found with the letters.

Physicians said the youths apparently were beaten six or eight hours before the bodies were found at 2 p. m. Neither was bound, and only the head blows were any indication of an attack.

Crittenden county, Arkansas, authorities were notified and began an investigation.

Athletes of State May Be Ineligible

Crane, Well Known Here, Among List to Be Questioned

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 23.—(AP)—The Arkansas Democrat says today that the illegality of a half dozen or more of Arkansas' best known athletes will be tested today when the ineligibility commission of Arkansas colleges meets this afternoon.

The list of names was not made public, but at least two state men last year will be included in the inquiry: Paul (Red) Fisher, halfback of Arkansas college, and Frank Chittwood of the College of the Ozarks.

Others whose ineligibility will be questioned, this thought will be Emmett Crain, coach and Douglas of the same school.

Last year Crain played with Manilla Aggie. It was here he earned an all state berth.

Dairying Fares Better

IN AN article published by The Star last Tuesday, County Agent Smith wrote that while the price of cotton has declined an average of 41 per cent, butterfat has suffered a decline of only 29 per cent.

These figures agree with the reports of national price investigators, which show that the food industry is closer to normal both in demand and price than any other industry in America today.

Though we continue to talk ourselves into believing that "hard times" are here to stay, the fact is that we are buying food in pretty nearly the same quantities as other years, and are paying relatively better prices for food than for the clothes we wear or for other necessities.

The point to Mr. Smith's article was that the farmer, who is in the same grip of industrial circumstances as the man in town, ought to turn his land resources over to the growing of some product which has a "future."

His figures, quoted to prove that point, are interesting. The demand for ice cream—just one of the many butterfat products—has increased 331.3 per cent in the last ten years. But the demand for cotton has virtually stood still.

Therefore, in a depression period such as we have just been going through, butterfat stands the gaff, but the price structure of cotton goes to pieces.

There will always be a market for good grades of cotton, but in smaller quantities. Hempstead county farmers need to add the value of dairy farming as a livelihood while they are waiting for cotton to stage.

This reduction will never come about except as the farmer finds something else on which to spend his efforts.

A Prize Editorial

WE ARE indebted to Wallace Hurley's Paris Express for the following copy of a prize-winning editorial from a contest conducted by the Omaha Bee:

My neighbor has prospered. His home is the last word in modern architecture and equipment. It is his hobby. He loves every block and every board in it. He surrounds it with grassy plots and flowers, and adorns it inside and outside according to his sense of artistic grace and beauty.

Not only is the home a source of pride and satisfaction to my neighbor but its beauty and grace and general attractiveness sheds distinction and adds to the value of the property around it.

Now my home is a modest affair. It needs paint and the roof does not cover it as well as the mortgage. What is meant for grass plot shows bare patches like the exposed portion of a little boy's trousers.

And instead of graceful flowing vines my house is run over by little rosy amblers who clamber about scraping off paint leaving muddy streaks in their wake. There are five of them, and all the hard work, sacrifice and care they mean to me is nothing compared to the pride I have in their clear eyes, clean minds and sturdy bodies.

To the hope I hold in their future and the present struggle to keep them clothed, housed and fed is a small affair. They represent my family estate. To them I hope to leave an inheritance of character and courage. And to the world I shall not bequeath large sums to charity, schools, hospitals, but a family of men and women equipped to take up the problem of life.

But when my neighbor begins to talk taxes I have an uneasy feeling that according to his way of looking at it, I should have drowned those dimpled bodies before their eyes were open. He has figured out to a penny how much it is costing me to educate one of my children.

I believe my neighbor is wrong. My children have a monetary value to the town. I buy from him such things as he has to sell, thereby adding to his riches.

I go farther. I am raising no hogs for profit nor cattle to market but raw material for the nation of tomorrow. They are not mine alone. They belong to my neighbor as well. It is to his interest as well as to mine that they become fit and useful citizens. As they become trained, as they were educated, they will develop. The community has a part in that development.

My neighbor has no more right to spread niggardly system that will dwarf the future of my children, than I have to throw trash in his yard.

A Move Against Stunting

FIFTY of the nation's leading airplane makers, convening at Washington, have passed a resolution aiming to outlaw the stunting of airplanes except for necessary test work. The movement is a step in the right direction.

In routine army and navy work stunting is essential. It is also essential as the airplane manufacturers point out, in certain test flights. It is entirely out of place, however, at public exhibitions where lives of innocent bystanders can too easily be endangered.

Furthermore, it is bad business—which, probably, is what hit the makers of airplanes. It does little good to tell the public that flying is safe when a squadron of stunters can go out and, by doing a dizzy series of flip-flops, persuade the average man that aviation is after all a game for dare-devils.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The politicians and business interests which are trying to obtain an embargo on all imports from Soviet Russia appear to be in for a hot argument with the important automobile industry.

Two schools of thought have grown up lately about Russia and the dispute rather resembles that over the Hawley-Smoot tariff act, which manufacturers fearing foreign competition within the United States thought was a very fine thing and which those who wanted to maintain their export markets felt was pretty terrible.

Lately there has been built up a theory that when Soviet Russia hedges whet on the Chicago market or exports a surplus or engages in any other legitimate business activity she is committing an international crime, and that it is more heinous than it would be if any other nation did the same thing.

Both in America and Europe this theory has been propagated by those who believe that if Russia could be stopped from exporting anything there would be that much more export business and domestic sales for the other countries.

The other attitude, shared by equally hard-headed business men, is that Russia is a good customer, is going to be a better one and that there is no sense in seeking a good customer in the nose.

Praises Soviets
General Motors, the world's largest exporter, appears to have gone the whole hog in favor of encouraging Russia through an enthusiastic pronouncement in Paris by James D. Mooney, vice president and manager of its export business.

While Secretary of Agriculture Hyde and leaders in such industries as lumber, coal and manganese were shouting about the Red menace in union with America's most distinguished red-baiters, Mooney was on a 4000-mile excursion into Russia to find out what was really going on.

He emerged ecstatic, urging recognition of the Soviet. He denied that Russia was trying to demoralize world trade by dumping.

The Soviet government is as stable as any government in the world, Mooney says, because the Russian people are enthusiastically supporting its strong centralized authority. He predicted complete success for the famous Five Year Plan.

"Life in Russia today is vital and dynamic with real purpose," Mooney is quoted as saying. "The Russians are a people with whom we have much in common. The two nations are free from 'entanglements that induce deep-seated hatreds.' Both have broad horizons that induce a vision of the future; neither of us is afraid to take a chance."

Aim at Same Goal
"Our methods of approach may be different, but it strikes me that both of us are aiming at the same goal of welfare for all our people."

Furthermore, Mooney said, automotive equipment was one of Russia's most vital needs. Her good credit record and careful policies made her a good business risk, but she must be allowed to sell her surplus in order to be able to pay for her purchases.

Henry Ford has been doing business with Russia for years, but General Motors has hardly touched the Russian market.

About 15 per cent of America's automobile production in 1929 was exported. The value was more than $500,000,000 and automobiles ranked fourth among our exported commodities.

Mrs. Sid Henry Telephone 321

It's all in the day's journey—
Sunshine and wind and rain,
The bird's low note in the dewy dawn
And the dash of rain on the pane.
Then hoi for the brave adventure,
Dear heart—
Take courage and start again.
The One who ordered our going,
We think will show us the way,
And give us strength for the upward
climb,
And light when the skies are gray;
It's all in the day's journey! Dear

And love's at the end of the day.

Turnips Valuable as Good Dairy Feed

Extension Worker Advocates Turnips as Feed For Dairy Cattle

There has been a large crop of turnips raised, more than can be sold on the market. The milk cows of Arkansas offer a good market for the balance and will pay a good price for them. Pounded for pound, the dry matter of turnips is equal to that found in corn or any grain mixture when fed to the cows. This means that when grain is about $15.00 per ton, turnips are worth about $6.00 or $8.00 per ton, depending on whether they are crisp or withered. Again they are about equal to silage in feeding value and silage is variously priced from $6.00 to $9.00 per ton.

Turnips will replace one-half of the grain ration of a cow during the winter season, and she will keep up in milk flow. So wherever there are more turnips than can be used for marketing purposes, sell them to the cows. Farmers buy hay and grain, why should they not buy turnips and stop them according to the instruction as outlined by J. S. Knox, Extension Economist, Marketing? It will pay.

State Aid on City Street Debt Urged

Purkins Suggests Highway Contribute Toward Bond Maturities

WARREN, Oct. 23.—State Senator D. L. Purkins has launched a movement to obtain annual contributions from the state Highway Department toward payment of street bond maturities in cities and towns where some paved streets are continuations of state highways.

Streets paved jointly by the state and cities and towns under the Martineau road law would not be affected by this proposal, Mr. Purkins said. His plan would cause the state to assume part of the bonded indebtedness for streets paved before enactment of the Martineau road law and later made part of the state highway system, it was said.

Senator Purkins said that the Malvern Chamber of Commerce has endorsed his proposal. He has written mayors of all Arkansas cities and towns asking four questions on the status of street bonds in each community. He seeks to learn:

First, the proportionate amounts necessary each year to meet the annual maturities of the streets used in public highways.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 23.—Senator Joe T. The Ghost Writers
The startling and peculiar revelations were made by the ghost writers during the recent season.

After the last game, John McGraw wrote a little piece for the papers declaring, without reservation of compunction, that "Barnshaw and Grove won the series for the Athletics." It's a little hard to believe, but if McGraw says it's that way, there must be something to it.

Following the last game, Babe Ruth also went out on a limb. He boldly unburdened himself of the observation that Barnshaw was too hard for the Cards to solve. There must be a strain of Scotch-Irish in the Babe's blood that leads him to pry and sleuth around until he landed upon that amazing discovery.

Carefully Tested
However, you have the world series analyzed. Several "scientific" scientists must have spent hours in trying to determine just how the Athletics managed to defeat the Cardinals four out of six. Then, after figuring, testing, weighing the evidence far into the night, the truth was finally reached.

The world need no longer be in doubt about the 1930 "blue ribbon" classic of baseball. It has been decided positively that Grove and Barnshaw won it for the Athletics. Mostly Barnshaw.

Such are the marvels of the age—the radio, telephone, scientific laboratory and the ghost writer—that we are almost inclined to ask, with the barber, "What next?"

Bottomley, Too
It is not my desire to pick on a good first baseman when he is down, and I still think Sunny Jim was good first baseman—but I would like to know by what strange hocus pocus James Bottomley reached the conclusion that Barnshaw's speed was what defeated the Cardinals in the second game of the series.

At least that is what Bottomley wrote in the papers the next day.

Plan Busy Session At Oil Convention

Petroleum Institute Bars Exhibits at Annual Meeting

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.—(UP)—Approximately 4,000 oil men, scientists and leaders in the oil industry will journey to Chicago to attend nearly 100 meetings of the 11th annual convention of the American Petroleum Institute, November 10 to 13. They will come prepared for days and nights of serious practical discussion of current problems.

Gabby's Discovery

CHARLES GABBY STREET, besides managing the Cardinals, meeting 900,000 people he never saw before in his life and calling nearly all of them by their first names, such as "Hello, there!" (nearly everybody who crowded around Gabby seemed to have been named "There") found time to "write" his impressions.

After the second game in Philadelphia, Gabby told the waiting world that Mack's men had won the first two games because they got the jump on the Cardinals. He also opined that the Cardinals would have to fight because the Athletics had shown themselves to be a fine club.

Such are the epoch-making revelations of some of the supernatural scribes. What would we do without them?

Hoover will be invited to dedication ceremonies July 4 of the restoration of Schoenbrunn, Ohio's first town, according to an announcement made recently.

Hempstead County Dairying Improves

Purebred Sires Were Shipped Into This County Last November

One year ago the second of November there was delivered into Hempstead county 10 registered Jersey bulls from dams with butter fat records. These sires were placed about over Hempstead county, most of them in Bull Blocks, each bull so placed was owned by from 1 to 20 different persons. It will be several years yet before the full value of these animals can be determined, but their off-spring, which is being spread over the county will tell the story for many years hence. Calves are now being dropped which were sired by these animals, and the superior blood shows itself to a very marked degree.

O. N. Barr of Hinton community reports that 56 females have been bred to their club bull to date. If 25 of these calves are heifers and that say twelve of this number inherit the production characteristics from the sire this will represent, as shown from figures prepared by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, an additional profit to those farmers there of over $500 as a result of this one year's usage. These sires will be kept in a community for a period of three years; then transferred to other communities with the result that a community will have the advantage of these high bred sires for a period of from 8 to 10 years with one purchase price.

Money spent for these sires has perhaps been spent to a better advantage than any other money spent to further the dairy work in the county. Within the past two years there have been delivered into this county 20 pure bred dairy sires with butter fat records behind them, and these are very rapidly improving the quality of dairy cattle found here. There are about two very important methods which may be used in the improvement of dairy herds and the consequent production of profit as follows.

Improved feeding
Use of better sires.

The last two years both of these factors have been diligently pushed, and results in many sections are noticeable. "I notice a decided difference in the attention which people of the county are paying to better dairy stock," stated U. G. Stoy, the leading breeder of dairy cattle in the county. Those who are interested in seeing a well bred and well cared for dairy herd will do well to stop on the road from Hope to Washington sometime and see Mr. Stoy's herd. There are many communities in the county which need pure bred sires, and these communities may well see Mr. Stoy and purchase a sire from his herd of quality equal to and better in many cases, than those for which a much higher price is paid when purchased elsewhere and shipped in from other states or counties.

Heart Hungry

AUTHOR OF "RASH ROMANCE"

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Adventure enters the life of CELIA MITCHELL, 17, who is supposed to be a girl who has been kidnapped and is now in New York City. She is the daughter of a wealthy man who has been kidnapped and is now in New York City. She is the daughter of a wealthy man who has been kidnapped and is now in New York City.

The introduction of CELIA to JORDAN, a fascinating but at the same time a very mysterious man, is the beginning of a new chapter in her life. JORDAN is a man who has been kidnapped and is now in New York City. He is a man who has been kidnapped and is now in New York City.

CHAPTER XXXVI

JOHN MITCHELL, resting one arm on the table, eyed his companion as he spoke slowly.

"The man's a gambler," he said. "Works the fashionable resorts, transatlantic liners and any place he's likely to find real cash. I understand he has a number of men and women of high social rank among his acquaintances—particularly women. Must be rather a slick character!"

Evelyn Parsons was leaning forward. She looked astonished.

"Oh, John, how terrible! Imagine Celia becoming interested in such a—such an impostor!"

"Well, I can thank you for helping me break up that affair. Getting her out at your home was what did it."

"But I think this is dreadful!" Evelyn persisted. "How did you find out about this, John?"

"Through an agency. After the night of her birthday party I was worried. Wanted to be sure, and so I made an investigation. The thing took quite a little time. Jordan is shrewd enough so that he's only once gotten into legal entanglements. The people he fleeces, you understand, aren't the sort who care to rush into court or the newspapers."

"You're sure he really is as bad as you say?"

"My information is authentic. No question about it."

Mrs. Parsons was not eating. "But how—where did Celia come to know such a man?"

"He's the one who pulled her out of the water that time she nearly drowned at the Boat Club. Must say I have to give him credit for that. You know it seems to me—"

—seems to me Celia said before that she met him at your home. Could that be right, Evelyn?"

"At my home? Oh, no, John, you must be mistaken. Celia couldn't have said that. Why—ridiculous!"

Mitchell nodded. "Probably my mistake," he said. "I don't remember very clearly. Well, now that I know this young man for what he is you can be sure I feel lucky to have things turn out as they have. Yes, sir, getting her into the country is what did it! Something else to thank you for, too."

EVELYN PARSONS' glance was meaningful. "If I've helped, I'm glad, but we did it together, John."

"You're a wonderful helper," Evelyn waited. Mitchell did not speak. After a few moments the woman's azure gaze met his again.

"You're understanding, John," she said earnestly. "I feel that I can talk to you as to no one else. There's a little confession I ought to make. Then perhaps you'll see what this summer has meant to me."

"There was an instant's pause and then Evelyn continued: "Three months ago when I returned from Paris I was a broken-hearted woman. You know the happiness that Dwight and I—God bless him!—had always known. Never a cross word between us in 20 years. You understand what his passing meant to me!"

She touched a handkerchief daintily to her eyes before going on. "I felt so alone! There was no one to whom I could turn. In desperation I left everything and sailed for France. Those months were miserable. I had friends, but they had gone abroad for pleasure. I kept to myself and mourned. Yes, it was a dreadful winter. I think I am fairly brave, John, but I have never been so unhappy!"

"My dear, if this hurts you, don't go on—"

"But I must, John. I want you to understand. Besides telling it to you—doesn't hurt. It helps! After I came back to New York I made a new effort to forget myself. I told myself that what was past was past and I must carry on. There were business affairs to tend to. Then you came to me—with Celia."

Evelyn paused dramatically. "From that first night you came to see me everything has been different. I felt that here was someone who needed me. Here was something to which I could give myself. I was trying to make dear little Celia happy, so I gathered young people about. Their laughter and brightness were the very things I needed. Don't you see? What I've tried to do for Celia—and for you—has given me a new life. I'm no longer because I have—"

"The noiselessly moving waiter was at Mrs. Parsons' side. He held a tray of muffins shrouded in napkins."

"Will you have a muffin, madam?"

What Evelyn Parsons would have liked to do with that tray of muffins may be guessed. The fine climax of her dramatic scene had been ruined by a plate of bakery stuff.

She looked up startled. If there was a glint of fire in her blue eyes only the waiter saw it. Then, with an effort, Evelyn controlled herself.

"No muffins," she said. Mitchell helped himself to the hot bread and the waiter moved away.

"What you've told me is a wonderful lesson," he said slowly. "But it is more than that. It's the record of a beautiful spirit. Your love for Dwight will be enshrined in a multitude of unselfish deeds for others."

Evelyn stirred. "Dwight?" she said. Then, catching herself, she added quickly, "Oh, of course."

If this was an odd speech from a widow of 10 months Mitchell did not notice it. He was finishing his coffee. When he put down his cup he seemed to look at his companion with a new interest.

"Evelyn," he said, "you're a wonderful woman."

THE luncheon was soon over. There was no opportunity for Evelyn Parsons, try as she would, to reach again the high dramatic moment which she had built up before. From personalities the conversation veered sharply to practical affairs.

It was nearly 2:30 when John Mitchell, on the curb, lifted his hat and bowed as Evelyn's motor car moved away. She had offered to leave him at his office but Mitchell said he had an engagement nearby. Celia was watching from the window when the limousine reached Grammercy Square. She had tired of her book and began to grow anxious.

The car stopped. Celia called to Martha that she was leaving. Then she gathered up her sweater and books, opened the door and ran down the steps.

"It's not, too late, is it?" she asked eagerly as she stepped into the car beside Mrs. Parsons.

"Too late for what?"

"The picture. You know—John Barrymore. I looked in the morning paper and found the name of the theater. It's on Forty-third street."

"Oh, I'd forgotten. Really, I think we'd better put that off until another day. We can come in any afternoon, and you see it's getting on after three o'clock now. We won't be home as it is until five."

"No, I suppose not."

Celia was not of the temperament to sulk.

If Evelyn noticed that the girl was unusually quiet during the drive home she did not mention the fact. Mrs. Parsons, having embarked on a career of "making other's happy," devoted her thoughts to herself.

They did not go to the country club, but had dinner at home. Afterward Celia, inspired by Martha's reminiscences, wrote a letter to her mother. Then she curled up on the davenport and became absorbed in her book.

Lisl Duncan paid an unexpected call at Larchwood next morning. She drove up wearing the loose white duck trousers, checker shirt and beret which was her favorite hot weather costume.

"Take you on for a set of tennis?" she called to Celia as she opened the door and let herself into the house.

"Why, Lisl! Where did you come from?"

"Oh, I had a row with Kate and decided to clear out for a while."

"WHAT was the trouble?"

"This time? Oh, Kate knew I had a date last night. I wouldn't tell her who with, though, and so she got mad. She took every single pair of slippers from my shoe rack and hid them in the garage. When I got ready to put on my brocade sandals there wasn't a shoe in sight except the golf ox-fords I had on. Can you imagine it?"

Kate had looked everything of hers up and mother's shoes won't fit me. I could have killed her!"

Lisl looked so ferocious that Celia laughed.

"What did you do?" she asked. "Went in my bedroom slippers! Mother caught me coming in later, and didn't we have a pretty picnic! More fun at our house!"

Celia was on her way to get the rackets.

"Come on," she said. "I'd love to play and it will cool you off—even if the sun is hot."

For two hours Lisl patiently battled balls over the net which Celia could return, and gave the beginner helpful instruction. At one o'clock Mrs. Parsons appeared to tell them luncheon was ready. Lisl accepted her invitation to remain.

While they were eating a telephone message came for Celia. She excused herself and reappeared a moment later smiling.

"It was Ted," she said. "He's coming to take me to the races, and you're going, too, Lisl. I told him you would."

"Love to—but look at me!"

It was decided that one of Celia's dresses would serve in the emergency.

Two hours later at the finish of a thrilling steeplechase a figure in front of her caught Celia Mitchell's eye. She stared. Could it be possible? The girl leaned forward.

Relief From Curse

of Constipation

A Bottle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Ordalie at night. Next day bright. Got 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store. John S. Gibson Drug Co. Adv.

Officials Consider Plan of Dry Law

Officials Discuss Heavier Taxes on Alcoholic Beverages

RIO DE JANEIRO, Oct. 23.—(UP)—The government's plan would be to impose heavier import taxes on liquor and alcoholic beverages.

The officials believe it would cut down to a minimum the consumption of alcohol and eliminate the necessity of a dry enforcement organization, such as is necessary in the United States.

The argument is that with the imposition of the heavier import and manufacturing taxes, along with higher license fees for operators of saloons, liquor prices would become almost prohibitive.

The proposed action has already brought protests from Portugal, Cuba and Great Britain, from which most of the imported liquors used are shipped. But the protests have not kept the officials from a serious study of the situation.

Many officials believe that the alcoholic tax is certain of promulgation very soon.

Five Years' Taxes Are Paid With Pennies

FREDERICTON, N. B., Oct. 23.—(UP)—A dilatory tax-payer caused J. S. Scott, county secretary-treasurer, and his stenographer, a busy half-hour when he paid up five years' back taxes at one time.

The tax-payer brought two paper bags full of pennies to Scott's office. For half an hour Scott and his stenographer counted pennies. There were 1,887. The delinquent's taxes amounted to only $18.87. The six additional pennies were returned to him.

Bike Staging Come Back Manufacturers Declare

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.—(UP)—The bicycle industry, generally thought to be dying, has taken a new lease on life, according to George S. Lewis, Chicago bicycle manufacturer.

In spite of boasts by makers of the automobile, the bicycle was never out of vogue and is enjoying today a tremendous sales revival among the American people, he declared.

"Factory and office workers in the suburbs and in the towns in every part of the United States are economizing by riding the bike to work."

"I don't know why the sudden spirit has come this year, but any cyclist-maker can tell you that the industry has run upon a real buying revival," Lewis said.

Montana Claims Title of Champion Snake Killed

MILES CITY, Mont., Oct. 23.—(UP)—Charles M. Dayhoff of Rock Springs claims to be the champion rattlesnake killer of the world with a record of 175 rattlers in three days.

According to Dayhoff's story he came upon a snake den while heading cattle for shipment. He found and killed more than 80 reptiles that day.

The next day Dayhoff took several friends with him to another of the chair hills where he killed the snakes and killed 90 more.

The following day 27 more were slain in still a different section.

U. S. Museum Buys A Part of Cross

PIECE OF WOOD SAID TO BE PART OF CROSS IS PURCHASED

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 23.—(UP)—A small piece of wood, said to be from the cross on which Jesus was crucified, has been purchased by the Cleveland Museum of Art.

The sacred relic was bought by William M. Milliken, director of the museum from the famous Guelph collection while in Europe last summer. The price, not made public, was estimated in six figures.

The fragment of the cross is contained in the patent of St. Bernard, one of six rare objects purchased by Milliken from the Guelph treasury. Relics from this collection were taken from the cathedral of St. Blasius at Brunswick and until this summer were in the possession of the ducal house of Brunswick-Lunenbourg.

The bit of the cross was brought from Jerusalem by Duke Henry the Lion, most famous of the Guelph dukes.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 23.—(UP)—Plans are being formulated by the State Historical Society for observance of the 100th anniversary of its founding, December 11.

According to Dr. B. F. Coleman, secretary of the society, it is expected that all local historical societies throughout the state will hold special meetings in observance of the date.

December 11 is also the date of Indiana's admission into the Union. It was officially made a state in 1816.

Bees Faced Starvation But Frost Saved Them

DEADWOOD, S. D., Oct. 23.—(UP)—Honey bees, which abound in the vicinity of Pactola and Silver City, were faced with a winter of starvation until last week when an unusual occurrence saved them.

Due to the summer's drouth the bees had been unable to store honey as usual. The strawberry, raspberry and other wild blossoms had failed them. Then came a day of intense heat followed by frost. The next morning the leaves of ash, box elder, elm and even needles of pine trees dripped with syrup.

There was wild excitement among the bees. Working feverishly, they loaded their bodies with the substance. In two days their coffers were as loaded as if they had worked all summer.

Plan Bridge to Honor George Washington

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—(UP)—In line with plans for a nationwide celebration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, members of Congress from Pennsylvania and New Jersey have announced their intention to introduce a resolution to be erected over the Delaware river above Trenton.

The bridge would serve to commemorate the occasion of the crossing of the Delaware by Washington on Christmas night 1776.

In the even Congress passes the resolution, an effort will be made to complete the structure in time for the universal program outlined for 1932.

Faces Deadly Snake Instead of Polcat

RAPID CITY, S. D., Oct. 23.—(UP)—A deadly coral snake and a polecat gave Arthur Rose of Rapid City some anxious moments while fishing.

Rose climbed the bank of a stream to take a short cut home. As he reached the top he was confronted by a snake of brilliant coloring and as slender as a lead pencil.

Rose reached for a rock and found a pole cat nearby. He decided that the snake was less dangerous and killed it.

He discovered later the snake was of the deadly coral species.
